Candidates ready to kick off BYUSA elections

By TASHA SOTOMAYOR

Our candidates will begin their campaign Tuesday for the 2003-2004 BYU student body president election.

The task of reaching 30,000 students at BYU is daunting, but last year's candidates say the campaigning process involved much more than talking to every student on campus.

Although I spent a lot of time knocking on doors and meeting people, I wasn't trying to meet as many people as possible," said Student Body President Foster. "I wanted every encounter to be meaningful."

Foster said his campaign focused more on a qualitative rather than quantitative relationship.

"We thought of ourselves like missionaries, getting commitments from people to vote for us," Foster said.

Robert Marsh, another candidate during last year's election, used candy and clothes to attract votes.

"Basically, for me it was a week where I focused on meeting chicks," said Marsh, 23, a senior from South Carolina majoring in chemical engineering. "I spent all of my money on candy to give to girls, and I wore a shiny purple suit to one of the question and answer sessions. I looked good."

Candidates are limited in their campaigning options because the priority of BYU is education, not campaigning year round, said Elections Chair Joshua Dahmer, 24, a senior from E. Wenatchee, Wash., majoring in business finance.

During the two weeks of campaigning, candidates are allowed to put up signs in five major quads on campus, as well as to pass out fliers, set up booths and contact students off campus by going door to door, Dahmer said.

"Students need to be pro-active and find out for themselves about the candidates," he said. "Only 5,959 out of 30,000 students actually voted last year."

One of Foster's goals is to see the percentage of voters increase to 40 percent compared to last year's 20 percent.

"With four campaign teams this year, they will be able to reach a lot more students," Foster said. "Every campaign will have their pictures on posters, which should also really help in publicity."

Peterson, certified flight instructor, and Travis Passey, 2nd Lt. in the Air Force, prepare their plane for flight. A new tower at the Provo City Airport will help for the increased air traffic in Utah Valley.

New tower at Provo City Airport will monitor highly congested air traffic in Utah Valley

By ZACHARY WEST

A new air traffic control tower will be built at the Provo City Airport to ease congestion of the Utah Valley State College flight school and quiet commercial flights about the airport's inadequacies.

"We'll start building the tower this summer; it's our goal," said Steve Gleason, Provo airport manager. "It's long overdue and extremely necessary for the airport."

Gleason said a tower is the most important safety issue for Provo's airport because it's far busier than most airports that have towers.

The No. 1 safety issue for Utah's division of aeronautics is getting a tower in the Provo Airport," said Pat Morley, director of aeronautical operations for the Utah Department of Transportation. "We report about 500 operations a day and 150,000 operations a year in Provo's airport, which is a lot of traffic."

Morley said to the credit of Provo's pilots, they have not had a major accident, but a tower would make it a better situation.

"The mix of airport users — commercial, student and local aircraft — combines slow-moving training planes with commercial jets in the same traffic pattern, causing congestion at check points," Gleason said. "A tower would help alleviate that congestion."

Provo officials offered their support for the new tower.

"We are anxious to secure the funds so we can start construction on an airport control tower to enhance safety," said Mike Mower, spokesman for Provo Mayor Lewis K. Billings. "We're working with our federal agencies in Washington to secure those funds."

Morley said the U.S. Senate has earmarked $600,000 for a tower and the U.S. Congress has proposed $1 million.

"They have to come to an agreement," Morley said. "A final figure has yet to be determined."

Officials list a number of reasons for a tower in Utah Valley.

United States terrorist threat level elevated

Utah under no specific terrorist threat

By CARRIE SHEFFIELD

County and state officials are asking citizens for an increased vigilance against terrorism while repeating that Utah is not under any specific terrorist threat.

The request came after the Bush administration raised the national homeland security threat level Friday from "elevated" to "high."

"We are recognizing what is happening to us nationally, and we're talking with local police departments, but we're not planning to raise our threat level," said Tammy Palmer, spokeswoman for Utah Homeland Security. "Right now there is no specific threat to Utah."

Utah's level of warning was raised to "elevated" last September following a national increase in warning levels.

Palmer said Utah's level was raised "because of the significance of Sept. 11," even though there was no perceived credible threat to Utah at that time either.

Palmer said Utah's security relies on several sources. "Utah Homeland Security works with the FBI. We communicate with them daily," Palmer said. "We're also asking the public to continue to be vigilant, to watch for suspicious activity and report it to local law enforcement agents."

Lt. Dave Bennett, Emergency Services Division for Utah County, echoed Palmer's sentiments.

"You can't rely on law enforcement to do it all," Bennett said. "We're so dependent, just like a neighborhood, on watch programs. Citizens have to be mindful of things going on. I think the National Homeland Security is asking people in general to be more aware of things going on around them."

Bennett said Utah County has a network of resources if it were to face attacks.

"We'd respond to it, but we'd request assistance from some of the local fire and medical departments," Bennett said. "If people were exposed to chemical or biological agents, we'd have to decontaminate them, and we have equipment to deal with that."

Public Information Officer Justin Jones of the Utah County Health Department said the county would be prepared if an attack occurred.

"We have plans in place to react to any biological attack," Jones said. "We're going about our business on a day-to-day basis as normal. We're just being a little more vigilant in understanding that the threat has increased."

Jones said following Sept. 11, every local health department received funding through public health preparedness grants.

Utah County received a $400,000 grant this year to hire a full-time emergency response planner, epidemiologist and public information officer.

"All of these stem back to the incidents in and around Sept. 11, including the anthrax victims that were reported back east in New York, Florida and Virginia," Jones said.

Utah's Health Department received 3,000 doses of vaccination, the small pox vaccine, Thursday night from the Center for Disease Control.

The vaccinations will be distributed among the state's health departments within the next few weeks, Jones said.

He also said the department has a list of health care professionals who have volunteered to receive small pox vaccinations.

Utah's Department of Homeland Security developed guidelines for citizens to prepare for a terrorist attack.

"We are not planning to raise our threat level. Right now there is no specific threat to Utah."

Salt Lake City re-lights the fire within

By ANNE IRELAND

SALT LAKE CITY — The anniversary of the Olympic cauldron brought thousands of spectators Saturday, wearing colorful volunteer jackets, Team U.S.A. pins and coveted Olympic pins, to the stadium just south of Rice-Eccles Stadium in Salt Lake City.

To join with you in remembering the city when one year ago, here in this state, this city, in this stadium, we hosted the 2002 Winter Olympic Games. Seventy-eight countries, 2,500 athletes, the President of the United States and a half billion people from across the planet had their hearts beat as one," said Gov. Mike Leavitt to an estimated crowd of 12,000 people.

WL News Radio's Grant Nielsen and

Amanda Dickson hosted an hour full of entertainment. Government officials, leaders from the Salt Lake Organizing Committee and Olympians shared brief comments. Olympic music from the Mormon Tabernacle Choir and Children of Light choir were heard, and video presentations of Olympic memories and taped speeches were viewed on giant screens on each end of the erected stage. The cauldron was centered behind the stage.

The celebration climaxed as the cauldron was lit, and fireworks exploded to the Mormon Tabernacle Choir singing "Citius, Altius, Fortius" — Higher, Faster, Stronger. The cauldron's flame will burn 17 days.

"We will never forget those images of athletes that changed our city's skyline to a cathedral of champions, back lit by the shining Olympic rings at night," Salt Lake

BRIEFING

The world is our campus

Reuters

A convoy of military vehicles moves through rural Texas as personnel get into position to begin searching for shuttle debris near Bronson, Texas, Sunday. Authorities continue searching a huge debris field looking for pieces of the Space Shuttle Columbia.

U.S. government searches for Columbia shuttle debris

HEMPHILL, Texas — Searchers trudging through the East Texas mud Sunday found a charred hatch door with a hydraulic opening mechanism believed to have been part of the space shuttle Columbia.

"The hatch for the most part was intact," said Nacogdoches County Sheriff Thomas Kerss.

"It does have some tearing of the metal and several protective shields had been dislodged from the door, but some of those were still in place."

Kerss said the door measured 3 feet by 3 feet and was "fairly heavy." It wasn't immediately clear what part of the shuttle it may have come from.

Two other large pieces of shuttle debris located Sunday remained in a remote area where recovery teams planned to retrieve them Monday, Kerss said. So far, the most significant finds have been a 2-foot long section of Columbia's wing and a covering for a landing gear hatch.

Searchers began their second week in a cold rain, struggling through mud and briars and up steep grades amid the ticks and other bugs of the Texas woods and bogs.

"I don't think any one thing really hurts you all that much," said Timothy Palermo, a National Guardsman from Port Arthur, Texas. But he said it can be frustrating:

"You can spend all day hacking your way through an area and not have gone two miles because of the terrain."

Train derails, leaks chemicals

TAMAROA, Ill.(AP) — A freight train carrying hazardous chemicals derailed in the middle of town Sunday and authorities evacuated 500 of the town's 800 residents. One chemical leaked and caught fire.

No injuries were reported after 16 to 21 cars of a northbound Illinois Central-Canadian National train derailed during the morning, authorities said.

"It sounded like a (automobile) wreck, but I didn't pay attention to it," said Nina Rich, 74, who was at home when the train derailed and later became one of the evacuees. Another of the evacuees said emergency workers told her it could be three days before she and her family will be allowed to return home.

"There's nothing you can do about it, so it's not worth getting upset about," Elizabeth Stein said.

U.S. troops raids schools

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — American agents swoop in on three Islamic schools in the capital, breaking down doors, blindfolding a cook and peppering him with questions about alleged terror links, then disappear as quickly as they came.

Reports of the operation last month sparked a new wave of anger at the presence of FBI agents in Pakistan and a vow by hard-line religious leaders to kick American soldiers and agents out of the country. But the raids never happened, U.S. Embassy and Pakistani law enforcement officials insist.

"Whatever it was, we had nothing to do with it," a U.S. official told The Associated Press of the alleged Jan. 16 incident, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Brig. Javed Iqbal Cheema, a senior Interior Ministry official who is coordinating intelligence and security in the campaign against terrorist groups, agreed.

"These raids simply never took place," Cheema said. "These people wanted to malign the government, so they made these things up, but it is absolutely false. When we raid someplace, we own up to it"

SEARCHING FOR PEACE

Pope John Paul II made a dramatic appeal for world prayers to avert war in Iraq, saying it sometimes appeared that only God can stop a conflict now.

Pope emphasizes peace

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II will send a special envoy to Iraq to emphasize his appeal for peace and to encourage Iraqi authorities to cooperate with the United Nations, the Vatican announced Sunday. Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, emeritus president of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, will leave Rome on Monday for Baghdad, accompanied by a counselor, Monsignor Franco Coppola.

Their mission is to "show to all the plea of the Holy Father in favor of peace and to help the Iraqi authorities make a serious reflection on the need for effective international cooperation, based on justice and international rights, with the aim of assuring this population of the supreme good of peace," papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said in a statement.

Details of the visit were not released, but meetings with top Iraqi officials, including possibly Saddam Hussein, were expected.

Petroleum pipe dream

LONDON (AP) — The idea that Saddam Hussein's ouster in a U.S.-led war would mean a surge in Iraq's oil output is probably just a petroleum pipe dream.

The country has managed to produce large volumes of oil — despite 12 years of U.N. sanctions, a dearth of investment and interference from the Iraqi leader himself — only because of the tenacity of its oil technicians.

But Iraqis have kept the crude flowing by running their oil industry into the ground — literally. Engineers shut at least one well in the country's North Jambur oil field after pipe casings corroded so badly that the well-head subsided into the earth.

Iraq's oil industry was already in "lamentable" shape three years ago, according to a team of visiting U.N. experts who reported the collapsed wellhead. Anecdotal evidence suggests conditions at Iraqi oil fields, refineries and export terminals have deteriorated further.

Iraq has the world's second largest petroleum reserves and in 1990 was capable of pumping 3.5 million barrels of crude a day. Now capacity is down to 2.8 million barrels and falling annually by 100,000 barrels.

to the shape of the valley and the elevation drop from Salt Lake City to Provo, Utah Valley is not on the radar, Morley said. "The flow of air traffic in Provo is not controlled by a tower, so it's a safety concern," Morley said. "Provo has a lot of air traffic, and it's a safety concern. We need a tower to control the air traffic in Provo."

When the public hears the word "uncontrolled airspace," they automatically think chaos," Morley said. "There is always confusion, but it's not controlled by a tower. According to the Federal Aviation Administration, regulations are in place in areas without towers, and everyone who flies in those areas follow FAA regulations.

Two days before the 2002 Olympics, a temporary radar and portable tower were used in the Provo Airport to monitor the airways of Utah Valley. Once the games started, a temporary flight restriction was initiated, restricting the flight of aircraft in the area.

"We only had the tower for two days before they implemented a temporary flight restriction," Smith said. "They (the control tower personnel) were excited about it. The numbers they had are part of the reason we have been really pushing for a tower."

Smith said the tower operator reported 860 events in one day at Provo's airport before the restriction was implemented. An event is a departure or landing of a plane.

The flight program was moved to another location during the Olympics.

"When we moved our flight program, they only reported eight events the whole day. That tells people just how much we are doing here," Smith said.

Because of the traffic in Provo, some commercial pilots have chosen to fly to Salt Lake's airport rather than come directly to Provo Airport.

"Wherever you fly in the United States, you won't find places with this amount of saturation without a tower," Markides said. "When commercial pilots come to a place such as this, they are amazed that there is not a tower. They have never been in that type of environment before. They don't know what to do."

Plans for the tower are still in the making, but because of the apparent need, officials are working to make it happen.

"I don't know what the ground breaking date or time schedule will be for construction on a tower," Morley said. "The need for a tower has been there for many years. It has now come to a point where we have to say it is important enough to put a hard effort behind getting it."

The new Salt Lake City Public Library, which is more than twice the size of the old building and features shops, fireplaces and a garden plaza, opened Saturday.

SLC opens library

Structure touted as community gathering place

By LISA MILLETT

Hundreds of people gathered in the new $70 million Salt Lake City Public Library to celebrate its opening on Saturday.

Six years ago, the process of creating the new library for the community began. Sixty-eight percent of the community voted in support of the funding for the new library. Two and a half years ago, the library ground breaking commenced.

"The building is principally designed for you, our people," said Roger Sandack, president of the library board at the opening ceremony. "We want you to feel the comforts of home, the easy life, the comfortable ceilings, snacks and drinks, warm fireplaces and rooms to fulfill all of your children's fantasies."

The opening ceremony was in the Urban Room, the new main section of the library located at 210 E. 400 South in Salt Lake. A ceiling decoration of miniature books and digital butterflies hung overhead.

The library collection has expanded to 500,000 books, CDs, videos, DVDs and includes material in 20 different languages. The building has six floors, plus a two-level, 600-stall underground parking structure.

Some of the building's new features include a crescent walkway wall to view the city, a roof terrace, a garden plaza with a fountain and reflecting pool, a 300-seat auditorium, fireplaces, an outdoor amphitheatre and spiral staircases.

Shops located on the main floor sell items such as comic books, flowers, newspapers and magazines. Artwork is also located throughout the library.

"This is a place that will help us to connect, not only with the beautiful mountains but with people from near and far," said Salt Lake City Mayor Rocky Anderson. "It is a place not to be silenced, not to be shushed, but a place where all people will be encouraged to speak and create — A place of uplift and inspiration."

"As we use this grand library in the years to come, let it inspire us to do more, to be more, and to give more to this great community and to our world," Anderson said. "Let this be a place where community is built, where friends are made, where connections are forged."

Library architect Moshe Safdie said the building is more than 200,000 square feet, double the previous space of the old library.

Safdie didn't have an intended theme for the library, but he wanted the library to be a place where people would feel welcome.

"This is not just a library," Safdie said. "This is a library square. This is a meeting place for the citizens of Salt Lake."

Former Mayor Deedee Corradini, who initially helped with the project of the library, also attended the opening ceremony.

"The new library has exceeded my wildest dreams and expectations, and it really is a symbol of Salt Lake City and what we've become and grown into as a city," Corradini said. "I think it bodes a wonderful future."

The children's library on the first floor includes story and craft rooms and creative spaces where parents and children can read together.

"I think that this library will be a community meeting place, sort of a living room, for the whole Salt Lake since we don't have anything else of this magnitude," children's librarian Abbie Bell said. "We are hoping that this is a place where people can come together and share ideas, disagreements or agreements, or to just be a gathering place."

Nancy Tessman, director of the Salt Lake City Library, said libraries are about more than just holding books.

"They're about actually making available ideas in a manner that allows us to grow and thrive and understand," Tessman said. "They are not about dark places. They are about bright places."

Student visas now tracked online

New program more demanding of schools, students

By FAYE VERGARA

A new tracking device that demands more information from international students with visas attending different universities across the United States has been put in place.

The universities and schools will now be using the Student and Exchange Visitor Information System, an Internet-based program that allows tracking and monitoring of the students.

"It has been really user-friendly," said Kathy Firmage, immigration adviser of the Student Services of Provo School District.

The new Immigration and Naturalization Service program was ordered by Congress after the discovery that two of the terrorists from the Sept. 11 attacks had entered the country using student visas, but had not attended classes.

The deadline to have schools using the SEVIS program was Jan. 30.

"Any student, whether it be high school, colleges, private schools, an English school, that is coming here on a student visa — we all have to abide by this new SEVIS program," Firmage said.

Students entering the U.S. with a visa will need to report their information to their school, which will then be using SEVIS to monitor the information, and to report if the students are attending their classes or not.

If a school doesn't observe the law, it could lose its have foreign students campus.

"Everything has gotten strict, and I guess helps to keep us all safe," she said. See VISA on Page 5.

Students build businesses

Entrepreneurship
Common reaction to economic woes

JENNIFER GUERTIN

The recent downturn in the economy has triggered a rise in employment among highly educated people, according to the Small Business Department.

Barfuss, a local entrepreneur, said he agreed.

Many people who lose jobs are working for themselves," Barfuss said. "There are a lot of opportunities out there."

Every year, BYU students and graduates enter the work force as business owners, rather than employees.

Janeway, a BYU business student and owner of Inter-medical Paramedical Services, said she always wanted to own a business.

Janeway used to have a business selling magic shows. After working for another company, he decided to return to "self-employment."

He dismissed the autonomy of working for myself," he said.

Others like Hannah Hansen, owner of Water Wise Landscape Design, the idea of working for herself came more gradual.

"I started considering it about two years ago," she said. "There weren't a lot of companies doing landscaping and I saw a demand."

Petersen started her business in September 2002, four months before she graduated from BYU.

"I love working for myself," Petersen said. "It's flexible. I can work at home, take as many jobs as I want and still make more money than I could at any job in Utah Valley."

Petersen estimated she earns between $25 and $50 an hour and business is quickly growing.

Earning stacks of cash while working flexible hours may sound great, but it doesn't come without a price.

New business owners may have to put in long hours and take on added responsibility because they are the ones in charge. They may also face difficulties if they lack business experience.

"I was surprised by how much is involved in the business part," Petersen said. "Paperwork, documentation and business taxes. I see so much potential for growth, but I don't know how to expand."

However, Janeway said he doesn't believe lack of experience is a reason to hesitate.

"Everybody lacks something," Janeway said. "If you want to do it, don't make excuses. No one has enough time, money or experience. Prioritize your time. Budget your money. Rely on other's experience and gain more of your own."

Janeway and Petersen both said students should consider starting businesses before graduation.

"Having a business gives you a focus, a reason to really learn," Petersen said.

Petersen said she exploited her classes to help her business.

"We had to write a 30 page business paper for a technical writing class," she said. "I suckered my group into helping me research water conservation in Utah County."

Janeway said the free mentorship offered through the BYU center for entrepreneurship was his greatest aid.

"The entire center for entrepreneurship is there to get you through the sticky, confusing process of getting started," Janeway said. "Usually it would cost thousands of dollars to hire that kind of help."

Former Provo employee suing city over dismissal

MELISSA KIMBALL

Former Provo city employee Michael Stockwell is suing the city after he was forced to resign. Mayor Lewis K. Billings and administrative officer David Stockwell lied to him.

Stockwell later approached Hyde, telling him the city had decided to terminate his employment and that he would be permitted to resign.

"Mr. Stockwell then presented Mr. Hyde with a prepared resignation letter," the lawsuit stated. "The letter was drafted on Mr. Hyde's department letterhead, addressed to Mr. Stockwell and already signed by Mr. Stockwell accepting the resignation and drafted as though written by Mr. Hyde."

Stockwell also informed Hyde that challenging termination "would be a waste of time and money" because Utah is an "at-will" state and Provo could fire him without any recourse.

Hyde was given about six hours to make his decision.

"Mr. Hyde's execution of the prepared resignation letter was not done voluntarily or willingly, but rather under compulsion and duress from the threat and representations of Mr. Stockwell that he would be terminated without recourse," the lawsuit stated.

Hyde eventually moved to Washington after failure to find local employment. He later decided to file the lawsuit after reading a newspaper about a controversy in Provo in early 2002. Hyde learned state law protected Provo assistant department heads' employment, and they were not "at-will" employees.

The lawsuit reports this was the first time Hyde learned Stockwell had lied to him.

The lawsuit accuses Billings and Stockwell of fraud and is asking for more than $1.5 million in punitive damages.

New student tracking program online

mage said. "That's what we need to do."

The program requires more personal information from the students to make sure that they are observing the visa rules.

"It doesn't seem to be overly complicated, but changes are changes," Firmage said.

Students from all over the country will have to comply with this new law in order to keep their student status.

If students change addresses or other information, they must notify INS in 10 days.

"They want a lot of information; they want to make sure that you're really coming to study," said Silvana Mijangos, 23, a BYU senior from Guatemala, majoring in physical therapy.

Some students have not had a problem with the new system.

"I don't mind it either way," said Salt Lake Community College student Camila Nagata, 23, a sophomore from Brazil, majoring in business. "It wasn't too hard for me to input the information."

Because of the Sept. 11 attacks, it is more difficult for foreign students to receive their visas. It is also harder to make visits to their homes like they did before the program was implemented.

"I feel that it (SEVIS program) will help control who comes into the United States and that they will be studying, but at the same time it makes it really hard to visit your home," Mijangos said.

Missionaries share gospel on campus

By JESSICA POE

Students who assume BYU campus is a safe haven from missionary work are missing spiritual opportunities.

Missionaries from The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, thrilled to be serving in campus areas, encourage students to open their mouths and be aware of the different faiths surrounding them.

"It's sad because people think when they come here that missionary work is done, but if you pray for it, you will get it," said Sister GayLynn Pettersen, from Castro Valley, Calif., who has been serving a mission for four months.

The sister missionaries urge students to be aware and inquisitive of all residents in Provo, being careful not to assume everyone is Mormon.

"We can see that people are led to Provo, not by chance, but by the Lord," Pettersen said.

The roommates of one investigator were surprised to find out their roommate, who had accepted a calling in their ward, was not a member of The Church of Jesus Christ.

"Don't assume that everyone on campus is a member; there is obviously work here to do, or else we all wouldn't be here," said Sister Hayley Steelman, from Tualatin, Ore., who has been serving for 15 months.

Students are a large part of missionary work on campus.

"Without your help, it is impossible for the work to go on," said Elder Emmanuel Opore, from Accra, Ghana, who has been serving for 22 months.

"We encourage students to continue being diligent and continue being examples.

Their examples really have an impact on our investigators - positively and negatively," Opore said.

The missionaries in this area are led to people they teach, by students of BYU.

"All of the people that we have taught have been referred," Steelman said.

The missionaries are teaching a diverse group of people, many of whom are their peers.

"Here we get more than one culture," Steelman said. "We're teaching people from all over the world. Very few are American."

"We work really well with people our age, and it's not hard to relate with them, so I think that's why we were sent to this campus," Pettersen said.

Though some students think BYU campus would be a dreaded place to serve a mission, the missionaries disagree.

"We sense that people feel bad for us, but BYU campus is the coveted area in the mission," Pettersen said, "Everyone wants to come here."

The popularity and enthusiasm may come from the success of the mission.

Provo is one of the highest baptizing, English-speaking missions, in the world, according to Steelman.

Even with success, missionaries are always eager for more people to teach.

To provide a referral to the missionaries, call the Provo Mission Office at 377-1490.

Also, there is a referral box outside the missionaries' campus office, in the MARB, Room 243.

Health professor receives grant

By JESSICA TANAKA

Dr. Steve Aldana, associate professor for the college of health and human performance, has received a $792,000 research grant for an 18-month trial to determine if a healthy lifestyle can reduce the risk of disease.

"Obesity has been a tremendous problem in the United States since 1985, leading in one more logical step toward disease," Aldana said.

The number of Americans with diabetes mimics the increase in the number of obese Americans, according to statistics from the Center for Disease Control.

Cardiovascular disease, cancer and diabetes are the leading causes of death, and these diseases can be prevented, Aldana said.

"Seventy percent of all causes of death are lifestyle-related and preventable," Aldana said. "It just depends how you want to live your life."

Aldana received the award from the Swedish American Health System and is the principle investigator for the program. The funds for his research come from the Excellence in Academic Medicine Act in Illinois.

Approximately 300 participants will undergo an intense lifestyle program in March to "Students think they're immortal. But when you get to be 40, 50 or 60, people begin to feel their mortality."

Steve Aldana
Associate Professor

teach them nutrition and exercise habits that will help them reduce their risk for disease, Aldana said.

In the first six months of the trial, half the participants will undergo an intense lifestyle program to teach them nutrition and exercise habits that will help them reduce their risk for disease, Aldana said.

The other half of participants will act as a control to monitor differences in lifestyle and health.

After the first six months, the control group will also undergo the lifestyle program and both groups will be monitored for the remaining year of the trial, he said.

Participants will also undergo periodic nutrition analysis and blood from the both the experiment and control group will be tested for cholesterol levels, hypertension, anti-oxidant levels, bone health, weight and body fat.

In the lifestyle course, individuals will participate in physical activities, including exercising and grocery shopping for healthy foods. The participants will also wear pedometers which count each step they take throughout a day, to show active they are.

"Lots of people think they're active when they're really not," Aldana said.

Aldana is looking to scientifically explain what kind of lifestyle changes will reduce participants' risk for disease and how long it takes the participants to change their lifestyle.

Most college-age people have a hard time caring about taking care of their bodies because they seem so far in the future, Aldana said.

"Students think they're immortal," Aldana said. "When they get to be 40, 50 or 60, people begin to feel their mortality."

President Gordon B. Hinckley of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a prime example of a healthy lifestyle, Aldana said. Hinckley has an outstanding diet, exercises regularly and he is in his 90s, Aldana said.

Although exercising and eating healthy are not priorities for every college student's life, beginning a healthy lifestyle should begin early, Aldana said.

Warmth puts crimp in winter sales

Unseasonably warm temperatures tough on local businesses

By MARISSA WIDDISON

Some Provo and Orem businesses are melting in the warm January weather.

According to the National Weather Service, this January, Salt Lake City had the smallest amount of snowfall and the second warmest temperatures for any January on record.

Usually, the Salt Lake City area has receives 14.5 inches of snow by February.

This year, the area has received what the Weather Service classifies as "trace" snowfall.

With low precipitation levels for the ninth month in a row, something else is low too - business profits.

Ski rental and outdoor equipment stores have taken a financial hit with the warm weather.

"It's not been a great year," said Randy Park, president of Park's Sportsman. "The perception is that skiing is bad, so nobody's going."

Outdoors Unlimited manager Gardner Kearsley is experiencing a similar story.

"Yes, business did decline this year," Kearsley said. "If it doesn't snow and isn't cold, people don't ski and don't need to buy gloves and hats to keep warm."

Although Kearsley said winter sales declined by about 50 percent, he emphasized that student jobs will not be affected by this year's business.

He also said he is optimistic about the future.

"Outdoors Unlimited rents a wide variety of outdoor-related items that help to fill in when there's a lack in other areas," Kearsley said.

With a similar show of optimism, Park said his business will survive.

"We're like snow farmers," Park said. "When times are bad, you just regroup and pray for more snow next year."

Lucy Ridolphi, marketing manager for Sundance Ski Resort in Provo Canyon, said skiers might be pleasantly surprised if they gave the slopes a try.

"It's actually been really good skiing up here," Ridolphi said.

"Everybody who went up came back really jazzed. People think that because the valleys are warm the mountains are bare. Really, it's been good for us here."

Students like Mark Nuke aren't convinced.

"I've bought a seasonal pass every year since I've been here,"

"We're like snow farmers. When times are bad, you just regroup and pray for more snow next year."

Randy Park

President, Park's Sportsman

said Nuke, 20, a UVSC student from Mesa, Ariz., majoring in English. "But this season things were way too warm. I can't believe that there would be anything worth skiing covering those mountains."

According to the National Weather Service, snow season includes the months between September and January.

Most years, it snows 36.9 inches in a season. This season's total was 3.6 inches.

"I sure miss skiing," Nuke said. "But I also love being able to wear short-sleeved shirts in the middle of winter."

Incentives keep upperclassmen in dorms

MARISSA WIDDISON

At a time when students are deciding where to live next year, on-campus housing is offering more perks to convince people to stay at Heritage Halls. Students who have already lived on campus for one semester are classified as "returning students." According to a letter mailed to returning students, Heritage Halls tenants this year will receive several free benefits for staying on campus, including a free Internet connection, a $200 deduction from rent and a free meal plan for Fall Semester.

"We value our residents and want them to see them return," said Stoddard, BYU on-campus housing representative.

Although the free Ethernet Internet deduction were offered to returning students last year, this plan is a new bonus. Students can choose to use this meal plan at either the Morris Center or Creamery on Ninth.

Students may also choose to use the meal plan from the offered meal plan. "I would anybody leave at kind of offer?" asked Thornbrue, 21, a junior from Jordan, majoring in elementary education.

Thornbrue has lived on campus every semester so far and loves it.

"It's close, it's convenient, and it's cheap," Thornbrue said. "Plus, if you have to leave only one semester, it's not such a hassle with contracts."

Allison McMullianm, 21, from Renton, Wash., majoring in pre-animation, works at her computer in her dorm room at Heritage Halls. On-Campus Housing is offering benefits to returning students such as a $200 deduction in rent and a free meal plan in an attempt to keep more upperclassmen on campus.

Thornbrue is referring to a policy of many off-campus landlords that require students to buy an entire year's contract - even if they don't attend BYU for spring and summer semesters.

"I think we'll find that some landlords might change this," said Craig Thomas, an off-campus official. "But that's just speculation on my part. Right now, I know that rent rates are coming down a little bit from last year. The main reason is that vacancy rates are higher than they've been for a long time."

Friday was the first day students could sign up for specific rooms at Heritage Halls, and some students got up early to make sure they reserved the apartment and room they wanted for the upcoming semesters. Thornbrue was there at 7:15 a.m. and said there were at least eight other students in line.

But the new incentives have not convinced every student to stay. Rachel Geddes, 20, a junior from Shoreline, Wash., majoring in nursing, will be moving off campus starting spring semester.

"I've lived on campus for three years," Geddes said. "I like the environment here (at Heritage), but mostly I'm ready for a change. I need something different. I have a lot of friends who live off campus, and I've visited them a lot. It's just a different atmosphere."

According to Julie Franklin, BYU director of student life, a great on-campus atmosphere is created by the students who live at Heritage.

"We have had a long history of a strong returning student population on campus," Franklin said. "We enjoy having them, and they bring a lot to the communities they are a part of."

New club writes letters to military veterans

Delivery to be made on Valentine's Day

By ANDREW WATSON

Air Force cadets involved with a new service club on campus expressed their support and appreciation to war veterans Friday afternoon by writing them letters.

The cadets, along with other students in the Silver Wings Service Club, spent three hours in the Wells Building writing letters to lift the veterans' spirits.

Silver Wings is an organization that educates people about aerospace activities of the Air Force and organizes meaningful service projects as well.

Silver Wings' unofficial president, Rachael Maher, an industrial design major from Lehi said the club is open to anyone interested in the Air Force.

"Silver Wings is not an ROTC club," she said. "We are here to educate the public about the Air Force and give people interested in the Air Force a chance to serve. Silver Wings is for the students."

John Root, an Air Force cadet captain from Boise, Idaho, was more than happy to write a letter to the veterans.

"I feel a sense of gratitude for what they have done," Root said. "They have paid the price of freedom."

The Silver Wings Club came up with the idea of writing letters to war veterans after talking to members of the Arnold Air Society, another service organization for Air Force cadets.

Both organizations collaborated Friday to write the letters.

Maher said the club members plan to deliver the letters to the VA hospital in Salt Lake City on Valentine's Day.

"I want to support those who have come before me," said Shaun Loomis, Arnold Air Society vice commander. "They might be lonely, and it would be nice to help them out and make them feel better."

"People think that if you are in the military, you do push-ups at home and catch bullets in your teeth. Such is not the case."

Those involved in Friday's activity wrote the letters to cheer up veterans' Valentine's Day and express their respect and appreciation of the veterans' service to our country.

Through service activities, Silver Wings club members hope to attract not only those interested in the Air Force, but also want to show people that military life can be full of meaningful activities that are helpful to the community.

Maher is the daughter of Colonel Roger Maher, professor of aerospace studies, so she was naturally drawn to the Silver Wings Club.

"People think that if you are in the military, you do push-ups at home and catch bullets in your teeth. Such is not the case," Maher said.

After the Silver Wings Club officials organize leadership positions, members of the club are planning to hold more service projects to show the public that the Air Force can serve our country at home, as well as abroad.

For Y grad student, dorm life is just right

By ERICA STARR

Graduate student Kema Hobbs on-campus housing best needs.

Hobbs, 27, from Portland, Ore., is in her fifth year living in BYU on-campus housing where she now enjoys the comfort of a double room rate.

"For me, the dorms worked better because of my schedule on time," Hobbs said. "Living in the dorms plus, I don't have to cook, cleaning up dishes or my room."

Hobbs said she prefers the dorms for several reasons. She said she thinks the dorms are a lot more secure and safe than apartments. Studying in her room is a lot easier for her and paying one flat rate a year is better for her than paying monthly rent and utilities and groceries.

IceCats dominate in first win over Utah

MATT HARGREAVES

Residents living outside the Provo Ice Arena had two choices: watch the seismic activity that took place on Friday night as the IceCats defeated the Utah Skatin' Utes 4-1. The sound of the cheering crowd or the afterglow of the monkey falling off of the IceCats' backs.

"We've been waiting four years for this," assistant coach Ed Gantt said. "I watched this team flourish year after year by being the boards and digging for the loose puck."

After years of humiliation, Provo IceCats finally beat the University of Utah for the first time in team history.

The IceCats set the pace early in the hard-hitting game by firing the boards and digging for the loose puck.

"We just out-physicalled them, and we just wore them out," Gantt said. "They were tiring out as the game went on. They weren't expecting that physical."

The fore-checking of the IceCats resulted in turnovers by the Utes early in the first period. In the first minute of the second period, freshman winger Jason Orr, who buried the shot into the back of the net for a 1-0 lead.

Sophomore center Derek Battisti gave Provo a 2-0 lead when he scored on a power play at 13:31 of the first period.

With Jason Griffiths serving a bench minor penalty for having too many men on the ice, IceCat goalie "Haws" Hexberg came up with several glove-saves.

The second period was more of the same as Provo controlled the play in the Utah defensive zone. The Skatin' Utes made a run at the end, capitalizing on a rebound to make the score 2-1 going into the third period.

At 13:31 of the third period, Nate Orr returned an earlier favor by feeding a pass to freshman winger Jason Griffiths as he slid the puck into the net.

The remainder of the game was filled with big hits and huge saves by both teams. Tempers flared several times as Provo victory seemed eminent.

With the game winding down, graduate student Matt Hunsaker fired a wrist shot past several players and into the net to solidify the 4-1 victory.

"We knew that we had a team that could beat them," team captain Greg Ingram said. "After we hit them hard a couple of times, they were afraid to go into the corners to get the puck."

"We finally did it," sophomore defenseman Dan Haws said. "It has taken us a while to do, but we finally did it. This just proves that we are a new IceCat team. Now everyone knows that."

Volleyball continues mastery over UCSD

STEPHEN VINCENT

BYU volleyball coach Tom Peterson has repeatedly made it clear that his team has one goal for the season: to win its third national championship in five years.

Friday and Saturday's wins over UC San Diego, Peterson said, were just the beginning of the team's dominance.

Peterson said his biggest concern is consistency. In seven games against the Tritons, BYU won five-point or more lead and hung on to win the game.

On Saturday, BYU did not let UC San Diego win the weekend's first game of the weekend—BYU's first win against the Tritons.

"Our guys are good volleyball players, but we've got to put it together as a whole team for long periods of time without mistakes," Peterson said.

BYU hit well below its season average in both games. Averaging 2.97 in Friday's 30-28, 30-27 win, and .258 in Saturday's 28-30, 30-23, 30-22 win.

The Cougars had 40 attack points in the two matches. They hit a few balls out of bounds that we didn't need to hit," Peterson said.

BYU did have its bright spots in hitting. Michael Burke, who leads the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation in attack percentage, played well. Burke had 19 kills and just one error in the two matches, hitting .529.

"Carlos (Moreno's) ball placement is impeccable in every game I've played in," Burke said. "It's not hard to hit high percentages with him setting the ball."

Jaime Mayol came off the bench in Friday's match and made five kills without committing an error. That performance helped Mayol earn the start over Luka Slabe in Saturday's match, in which Mayol made 13 kills.

"Jaime came in and just lit it up," Peterson said. "He's the guy you notice because he can jump so stinking high."

In Friday's games, the Cougars built early leads but then struggled to hold on to them and get the win.

"I wasn't too good tonight," Peterson said. "I'm the reason why their team comes back. I didn't make such great substitutions at the right time."

The first three games on Saturday followed the same pattern as Friday's games, but BYU was unable to hold on for the win in game one.

BYU built a lead in the fourth game and didn't suffer a letdown, but Peterson still questioned his team's consistency.

"We relax too much, and other times try to do much," Peterson said. "You don't need to play to the crowd all the time to win a volleyball match. And if you do, you're going to make some mistakes. We're here to win a national championship, not just show off all the time."

Cougar basketball teams get big wins in conference play

Women dominate Air Force in 89-50 shellacking

By HILLARY WALLACE

The BYU women's basketball team sent Air Force flying home Saturday after its biggest offensive output of the season in a lopsided 89-50 win.

Outside shooting played a vital role in helping the Cougars dismantle the Falcons. BYU picked apart Air Force's defense, hitting 15 three-pointers for the game, which was also a season high.

Four Cougar players scored in double-digits and seven knocked down shots from the three-point line.

Scoring for BYU was spread across the roster as Judkins tried different combinations of players. Judkins said he rotated younger players off the bench to give them more experience.

Senior All-American Erin Thorn, who hit 6-of-8 shots behind the arc, led the Cougars' charge. She finished with 22 points and eight assists.

The Cougars' outside shooting created opportunities in the post, taking advantage of their height and dominating Air Force's forwards.

"Air Force could not go man-to-man on us because of our size," Judkins said.

Freshman Nancy Seljaas, who finished second in scoring with a career-high 13 points, said the past two wins against New Mexico on Thursday and Air Force have helped the team's chemistry and confidence.

"With these two games, we have gotten a few steps ahead and if we continue that, we'll just keep getting better and better," Seljaas said.

Men one step closer to MWC lead after win over Wyoming

By NIC GOODFELLOW

BYU's road woes are no longer an issue as the Cougars handed Wyoming its first home conference loss of the season, 74-66, in front of the Cowboys' third-largest crowd in history.

With the win, the Cougars move to 5-1 in conference, but more importantly, 2-0 on the road. The conference is very tight, and it could come down to who wins the most road games.

This was also Steve Cleveland's first win in Wyoming in his six-year career as head coach.

"Last year was a competitive game and the year before we were up 16 or 17 and couldn't finish it off," Cleveland said. "Tonight we were up and as things started slipping away, one guy after another came up big for the team."

BYU looked as if it was on a mission from the very beginning of the game. The Cougars jumped out to a quick 5-0 lead on two field goals by senior guard Travis Hansen.

After a two point basket by Wyoming's Euche Nsonwu-Amadi, junior Rafael Araujo hit his first three-point field goal of the year, making the score 8-2.

The first half was a defensive battle that hurt BYU the most. The Cougars got into early foul trouble.

But after the Cowboys' Donta Richardson gave Wyoming its first lead at 12-11, the Cougars made sure that they turned up the defensive pressure and they were able to hold the Cowboys in check the rest of the half, never yielding the lead again and holding a 35-28 at halftime.

Early in the second half, foul trouble became a problem for BYU's big men. Araujo picked his fourth foul and then fouled out with just over 12 minutes to go.

This put Wyoming in the driver's seat, and the Cougars began to take advantage of the Cougars' inside post play. The Cowboys closed to within six points, but the Cougars were unable to get any closer.

Junior Mark Bigelow, Hansen and the exceptional play of the Cougars' bench was the difference in the game.

"I told Travis and Mark, we aren't going to win any in this league unless they're well every night," Cleveland said.

Bigelow led the Cougars with 23 points, while Araujo added 15 points and 7 rebounds. Hansen finished with 15 points.

Next up for the Cougars is Colorado State tonight. They are coming off a close loss to Utah, and will be hungry for victory.

Game time is set for 7 p.m. at Fort Collins and can be heard on KSL radio 1160.

Cougars lose title at Cat Classic

By Stacie Searle

The Cougars lost their Cat Classic team title Friday to host University of Missouri, but the gymnasts performed well during Saturday's individual competition.

BYU's score of 192.850 was no match to University of Missouri's 195.875. New Hampshire took second with a score of 195.100, and Arizona captured third with a 194.575.

The Cougars had numerous falls on the bars and beam. BYU gymnasts earned a 47.775 on the bars, improving from last week's season-low score of 47.600. On the beam, the Cougars fell to 47.625, another season low.

Junior Kari Lords finished fourth on the bars with a team high score of 9.825. Missouri sophomore Alisha Robinson hit a 9.900, taking first place.

On the beam, the Cougars lost to Missouri's freshman Lauren Schwartzman and Arizona's sophomore Monica Bisordi, who each earned a 9.925. Senior Lindsay Butterfield received BYU's top score on beam, capturing a 9.725.

The all-around title was taken by Bisordi, who scored a 39.325. Missouri junior Lindsay Davis took second with a score of 39.225, and Robinson finished third with a 39.175.

BYU's all-around competitor, Butterfield, received her highest score ever on beam and floor. Her beam routine earned her a 9.725 and on the floor she received a 9.800.

Six Cougars competed during Saturday's individual competition in front of 2,523 fans.

Lords was BYU's top finisher in any event Saturday. Her score of 9.775 tied her for second on the bars with three other competitors.

The Cougars travel to Boise on Friday for a dual meet against the Boise State Broncos.

Tennis gets impressive wins

Women open conference play with win over rival Utah

By CELESTE WILCOX

Football couldn't do it. Basketball couldn't do it. The women's tennis team pulled it off, though, on Saturday in BYU's first match of conference play.

The ladies also defeated Weber St. Friday to set their record to 3-2 on the season.

Head coach Craig Manning said he is proud of the team is performing.

"We're executing really well," Manning said. "We weren't hardly any lapses in concentration today."

Playing against Weber St. on Friday, the Cougars beat the Wildcats 6-1, dropping only one of the No. 2 singles position.

BYU beat Utah 6-1, with the only loss coming in the first set at No. 3 singles.

Shuman Hadley Macfarlane and sophomore Nicole Schneider are undefeated this season with 5-0 records in singles. They are also ranked at the No. 2 doubles position for BYU.

Manning attributes their success to hard work.

"They're here early every day," Manning said. "Putting in extra time all the time pays off. Hard work pays off. They're playing awesome, and getting better every game."

Macfarlane said she recognizes that she is doing well, but she can always improve. Manning said he agrees.

"It's amazing as well as they (Macfarlane and Schneider) are playing that they can still do it better," Manning said.

Macfarlane said when the team is playing together, nothing can stop it.

"Everybody is playing well," she said. "When we're unified, we always play well."

After the loss of No. 2 player Lu Oswald, no one knew how the team would continue to perform.

Senior Dominique Reynolds, her doubles partner, said the loss of Oswald was huge.

"Losing any player is horrible," Reynolds said. "But I think that we've all stepped it up a notch in the last week. We're training hard and hopefully we can make up for that loss."

The team has the week off to practice, but will play Oklahoma St. Monday, Feb. 17 at 11 a.m. in Men defeat nationally ranked Arizona, sweep N. Arizona

By DAN SINGER

The BYU men's tennis team took two giant leaps forward this weekend by destroying Northern Arizona 7-0 and dismantling nationally-ranked Arizona 4-3.

The Cougars' win over Arizona is momentous. Arizona was previously unbeaten this season and had beaten Mountain West Conference favorite San Diego State earlier this year.

"Beating a team that beat one of the best teams in our conference is a huge step for us," sophomore Jose Lechuga said. "Our team is doing really well right now."

The Cougars' win resulted in part by learning from last week's mistakes. Last week, the Cougars lost to Oregon after handily defeating its doubles team. The Oregon singles squad rallied back to take the match.

Saturday against Arizona, the Cougars lost the doubles point, but then won four of the six singles points to win the match.

"We decided that if we were going down, we were going down fighting," coach Jim Osborne said. "As the match wore on, we got louder and louder and they got quiet."

Coach Osborne attributed the turning point to senior Jeff Olsen winning at the No. 5 singles seed. Soon after, Lechuga won a tough three-set match.

MWC player of the week, senior Erik Nyman and nationally ranked senior Carlos Lozano then entered the courts and won their respective matches.

The Cougars also proved a point to the Northern Arizona Lumberjacks. Individual members of the Lumberjacks had beaten some of the BYU men's team players in off-season matches.

"They felt like they had a chance of beating us," Osborne said.

They didn't have much of a chance. The Cougars throttled the Lumberjacks 7-0.

"We just dominated them in doubles," Osborne said. "These matches were the types of matches you coach college tennis for."

The BYU men's team will have the week off, then prepare to face Utah State at home Feb. 28.

Lacrosse beats Utah to end preseason

By DAVID RUECKERT

The BYU lacrosse team dominated the University of Utah Saturday in a scrimmage that brought the Cougars' preseason schedule to an end. The unofficial score was 15-2.

The Cougars took control of the game immediately, winning ground balls in the middle of the field and setting the tempo of the game with controlled offense.

Senior captain Jimmy Young said he was happy with his teammates' execution.

"I was really impressed with the offense," Young said. "I'm glad we scored a lot of goals. Last week we didn't score that well, so it was good to see it."

On defense, goalies Tyler Storer and Christian Kikumoto played well, splitting time in the goal. Their solid play shut out the Utes until only minutes remained in the game.

"I thought the goalies both played phenomenally," Lamb said. "I think they saved the ones they're supposed to and probably a few they're not supposed to."

BYU's controlled offense gave it plenty of looks at the goal, and Lamb said he was not going to put anything new in the team's play book for Friday's opener in Texas.

"We'll use the same looks we did today," he said. "It's just going to have to get better."

Sun Devils sweep BYU

By BRANDON KOLDITZ

Coming short in two late rallies, the BYU baseball team (1-5) was swept by No. 8 Arizona State University (14-1) this weekend.

In game one of the three-series that began Thursday, the Cougars rallied back to tie the game in the eighth inning, only to lose 5-4.

"We can be a confidence even though we lost a game but kept up with them," senior closer Tyler Dabo said. "Close games where we're hard but lost are good for us. Even though it's a loss in the books, the positive you can bring out of it are better."

In the game tied in the eighth inning, BYU junior Paul Dabo gave up a double and a run to ASU. The Cougars tied Jacinto with Dabo to stop the damage, but gave up back-to-back walks to ASU to score the winning run.

"It's still early," Dabo said. "In these games are to work on. Preseason is a great time as a team. It's early, but if we can bounce back."

The Cougars had a four-run game two on Friday, giving up seven runs to the third inning. The Sun Devils never looked back, winning the game 17-6.

BYU scored six runs off last national pitcher of the season Jered Liebeck. Liebeck lasted only four innings at the Cougar offense, leaving game one inning short of a win for the Cougars.

Senior starting pitcher Paul Bergeron (0-1, 6.48 ERA) took the loss for BYU allowing four runs, only two earned, in three innings. Senior second baseman Itri also added his second hit in two days, hitting a home run in the second inning.

The situation was reversed in game three on Saturday. ASU beat BYU 4-0 before tying the game in the sixth inning. The Sun Devils broke the tie and won the game 6-4 with two runs in the eighth inning.

BYU will return for a third game to Arizona on Thursday. They will take part in the Rawlings/Oakland Athletic Training Tournament in Orem. Next week's opponents include Northwestern, Columbia, Cal Poly and

For your own protection closely examine any offers which promise or guarantee large amounts of income/money.

Consider it a warning sign if you must buy something in order to start the program, or if you have to pay up front for the info. Please request info regarding the fee on every interview. Readers should beware of scams, especially when requiring payment up front.

Work at home ads usually require money up front to receive the books to contact the companies for work-at-home ideas. The Better Business Bureau said that the companies they have researched, for work-at-home stuffing envelopes, or making $1000 to $5000/month are NOT credible and you may lose money.

Be very careful NOT to give out any bank or Credit Card information unless you know the company well, or have checked them out thoroughly.

For a reliability report on a specific company, check first with your local Better Business Bureau. You will need the company's phone #.

It's the Most Wonderful Time of the Year

VIEWPOINT

More Bang for Your Buck

BYU athletics did the right thing. For once.

By JEREMY TWITCHELL

Call it selling out, call it pandering, call it whatever you want. The fact is, the changes to LaVell Edwards Stadium the BYU athletic department announced are necessary.

To be honest, I never thought I'd be writing a column to defend BYU. Yet, here I am. As much as I don't like being thought of as BYU's loyal attack dog, I can justify it because this decision really is in the best interest of the football team and the athletic program as a whole.

The center sections of the stadium's east side have been prime real estate for students since they were put in. My best seats last season were right in the middle of section 34, which will belong to the Cougar Club come next season, so I can understand student frustration with turning the area over to alumni with deep pockets. They may pay for the team, but we students are the ones who support it.

But the sad fact about college athletics is that it is driven by money, and students can't foot the bill.

You want someone to blame for that? Don't blame BYU. Blame the BCS. Ever since that beast assumed total control of college athletics, schools left out in the cold have been forced to scramble for funding to survive.

Every year, the Sears Director's Cup program measures the overall success of each university's athletic program. BYU consistently provides the most bang for its buck.

In 2000-2001, BYU finished at No. 17 for the year, with a total budget of just over $20 million. The collective spending average of the other top 20 teams was about $36 million. One school, Ohio State, spent more than three times as much as BYU.

Money is becoming the driving force of college athletics, and even though the purists don't like it, BYU can either play along or lay out as a Division I dorm-mat. Let's see how effective a missionary tool the sports teams are then.

Cougar fans were ecstatic last week with the signing of Ota Mohteanu and his big boy posse. Mohteanu had Miami, Arizona State and Texas hanging down his door as well. Granted he's LDS, but in all honesty, that's not a big enough edge for BYU to land every blue-chipper who goes to the local chapel on Sunday.

TOP TEN

BYU Shut-Outs

(and a couple good skunks)

- 09-27-75, Football: ASU 20, BYU 0. It was BYU that got shut out, but this was the last shutout BYU football suffered. BYU has scored in 350 games, an NCAA record.
- 05-05-01, Men's Volleyball: BYU 3, UCLA 0. The Cougars stomped on the Bruins to win the National Championship for the second time in three years.
- 10-29-88, Football: BYU 65, UNM 0. BYU welcomed the Lobos to Provo, then proceeded to demolish them. The victory was the biggest shutout in BYU history.
- 01-07-1907, Men's Basketball: BYU 72, Weber Academy 9. Unconfirmed rumors say the Weber coach said, "We just ran out of time. We were on the way back."
- 12-12-93, Women's Volleyball: BYU 3, UCLA 0. The Cougars went to UCLA and knocked off one of the best teams in the nation, earning BYU a #4 national ranking.
- 03-10-94, Men's Basketball: BYU 96, Utah 65. There's nothing like a big win over Utah. The Cougs dominated the Utes in the WAC tourney, cruising to the big win.
- 11-09-96, Football: BYU 49, Rice 0. Nationally ranked Utah had lost to Rice the week before, 51-10. Some thought BYU would upset the Cougars too. Not quite.
- 11-25-02, Women's Cross Country: The Cougar runners once again outdistanced their competitors to win their fourth national title in six years.
- 03-16-02, Women's Basketball: BYU 90, Florida 52. The 11th-seeded Cougars smashed the 6th-seeded Gators in the first round of the NCAA tournament.
- 05-08-99, Men's Volleyball: BYU 3, Long Beach State 0. BYU dropped Long Beach State, avenging an earlier loss, to capture their first National title.

What did you eat for breakfast today? Nothing. I'm starving.

Favorite TV show as a kid? SportsCenter; that is the only thing I've ever watched. I never really watched cartoons or anything like that.

Best place to eat in Provo? Ruby River. I'm a steak and potatoes kind of guy.

Best cast scenario. What are you doing 20 years from now? Flying my private jet over China.

What is your motto? Do it right the first time or don't do it at all.

At A Glance MWC Basketball

Men's Standings

Team	Conf	Overall
Utah	5-1	17-4
BYU	5-1	16-5
Wyoming	4-2	16-5
CSU	3-3	14-7
SDSU	3-3	12-7
UNLV	2-4	13-7
New Mexico	2-5	8-12
Air Force	1-6	10-10

Men's MWC Notes

Preseason predictions noted four Mountain West Conference teams (Utah, Wyoming, UNLV and BYU) that could win the conference. But what happened to UNLV? They're mired in mediocrity, stumbling to a 2-4 record with two of those losses coming at home.

SDSU's play at Cox Arena has been confusing. The Aztecs are 2-2, having handed Utah and Wyoming their only losses in the conference when they came to visit, but failing to hold off BYU or Colorado State. Which team will show up when they head out on the road?

The Cougars attributed their big win at Wyoming to focusing on getting rebounds. In seven MWC games last week, the team who finished with the edge on the glass won six of those games.

Women's MWC Notes

After dropping two straight games and losing Jennifer Lettner's 126 points and 8.7 rebounds, the BYU women's basketball team picked up the pieces and is riding a two-game winning streak.

The Weakest Link: UNLV women's basketball coach, Regina Miller, will appear on an upcoming episode of the syndicated television game show, "Weakest Link" which airs nationally today.

Two crucial MWC games went down to the wire this week. Utah took New Mexico, 64-61, in a thrilling game ending on half comeback victory over league rival Wyoming Thursday at Cox Pavilion. UNLV and Wyoming are tied for third in the league standings.

Cougar Close-Up

You Always Remember Your First Time

After years of humiliation, the Provo IceCats finally beat arch rival University of Utah for the first time in team history Saturday. The IceCats defeated the Utes, 4-1.

Cat Fight

After winning the Cat Classic two years in a row, the gymnastics team gave up their title Friday night to host University of Missouri and ended up in fourth place. BYU desperately needs Jamie Mabray back, who broke her ankle walking in the parking lot.

Make 'em Clap

The No. 3 men's volleyball team keeps racking up the wins and Cougar fans are loving it. The Cougars overcame 24 errors to defeat UC San Diego 3-1 in Provo, Saturday, and swept the Tritons in three straight games Friday.

Anna Kournikova...

was not at BYU's tennis match this past weekend. But the men's team did defeat the No. 48 Arizona Wildcats 4-3 Saturday, despite losing the doubles point and not having any superstars at the match.

Can't Wait To Be On The Road Again

By LEIGH DETHMAN

I've always wondered just what athletes do when they go on a road trip. I thought it was just a big vacation, where all you have to do is work a few hours every now and then playing the game you love.

Boy, was I wrong.

I had the opportunity to get an upclose look at what life on the road is all about. So I packed my bags, put on the old BYU sweats and went on a road trip to St. George with the BYU softball team.

THURSDAY, 01/30/03:

MILLER PARK, PROVO, 8:59 a.m.

After a quick meeting going over the dos and don'ts of the trip and a prayer to keep us safe, we boarded the bus for St. George. This road trip was the first of many for the Cougar softball team this season.

I woke up too early to actually eat breakfast, but luckily the team is always well fed. Sitting right in the front seat of the bus was a smorgasbord of breakfast items. There were about four-dozen bagels and tubs of cream cheese, fruit, trail mix and a few commemorative tins full of Mrs. Fields' cookies. Needless to say, I didn't go hungry for long.

UTAH, 11:03 a.m.

The bus ride was pretty quiet. Everyone seemed to be doing homework. I was pretty bored, but luckily, catcher Arron Layns brought her laptop. I stole it and watched a ripped version of My Big Fat Greek Wedding. A few other girls on the team had the same idea. Outfielder Brooke Cadiente was up front watching Spiderman and three other players were watching Blue Crush.

After a short stop for fast food in Cedar City, it was back to the bus for another two hours of boredom. A few of the girls passed the time by making prank phone calls. I hear it's a team tradition.

DESTINATION:

ST. GEORGE UTAH,

DIXIE STATE COLLEGE,

2:11 p.m.

As the bus approached the Dixie State field, R. Kelly's "The World's Greatest" boomed on the bus while players danced to the beat. I hear that the sophomore class has a deep connection to the song. They did a mean, choreographed dance to R. Kelly's hot vocals.

Coach Eakin planned a "warm-up" game against Dixie to get the team ready for the Thunderbird Classic. Although the team is focused, they are always singing and whipping out random movie quotes.

We just beat Dixie, it's seven p.m. and I haven't had any food since a roast beef sandwich back in Cedar City. Needless to say, I was starving. But people really do cater to Cougar athletes. The restaurant we went to roped off a whole room just for BYU and its entourage.

HOTEL, 9:02 p.m.

FREE! Well, free for a little while. Coach gave us about 15 minutes to get settled after dinner before a mandatory, team-only meeting.

Outfielders Debbie Dodds and Belinda Osborn wasted no time in finding some entertainment. Debbie knows a handful of yo-yo tricks, and taught them to a few girls.

At 9:15 I was banished to my hotel room while the team had a top-secret meeting. I guess they didn't want a reporter to know their game plan.

FRIDAY, 01/31/03:

Don't trust those hotel room alarm clocks. The clock in my room didn't go off, but luckily, I set my cell phone to buzz in time to catch the complimentary continental breakfast at the hotel.

SOFTBALL FIELDS, 11:23 a.m.

There is a crowd of little boys from the local elementary school ditching recess just so they could catch one of Oli Keohoku's long balls. The rambunctious boys teased, "Hey hot chicks, hey hot chicks, you make my mouth water." They couldn't have been older than third or fourth-graders. I guess flirting starts pretty early now.

COUGARS VS. OSU BEAVERS, 1:02 p.m.

The game started out with a bang, but the shot was in Oregon State's favor. The No. 23 Beavers jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the top of the first inning following OSU's Vanessa Lapala's home run.

Freshman centerfielder Janetta Lei gave the "Hawaiian Punch," hitting her first career home run to cut the Beaver lead to three runs. The Cougars dominated most of the game, but that first inning killed them. Final score: Beavers win it 5-3.

COUGARS VS. SOUTHERN UTAH

T-BIRDS, 2:59 p.m.

There wasn't much down time after the loss to the Beavers. The trainers had sand-wiches, and the team only had 10 minutes to digest before the first pitch against SUU.

BYU started out sluggish, falling behind 7-2. Debbie Dodds' first-career home run started a fiery BYU run to eventually tie the score. Deadlocked at 7-7, the game went into a tiebreaker. The Cougars wasted no time putting the T-bird away, scoring five runs to seal the game.

PIZZA FACTORY, 7:47 p.m.

I don't know about you, but a little wedge of a sub sandwich does not keep me going throughout the day, let alone someone playing back-to-back softball games.

Eakin let the girls have some free time with their families after dinner. A number of parents travel with the team.

The minute we got to the hotel, I was ready for bed. After another "team-only" meeting, my roomies came back and we all crashed. It will be an early morning tomorrow, and another full day at the fields.

Football is turning into a family affair at BYU.

That's going to be particularly true in the Cougar trenches of the present and future. At least that will be the case if things go as evidenced on Football Signing Day last Wednesday.

"I'm very excited about the recruiting class," head coach Gary Crowton said. "Most of it was geared to the front seven on both sides of the ball."

Although many familiar names came through the fax machine on Wednesday, the biggest name wasn't one Cougar fans know from the past.

OL Ofa Moheatau, the top high school offensive lineman in the country, doesn't have a brother or a father who beefed up the Cougar line. He's not related to any of the coaches.

So how did his family ties affect his decision to come to BYU?

"Ofa didn't want to go to the big-name schools," high school friend and teammate Detrick Mays said. "He liked the idea of being in a little town, close to family. It'd be impossible for him to come back to Texas every time he got a little homesick, so he wanted to be where he had family nearby."

Cougar fans might want to spruce up the houses of those relatives, especially if Moheatau becomes the player many believe he will be. Some analysts have listed the signing of Moheatau as significant as last year's signing of highly-touted QB Ben Olson.

Moheatau was the biggest national name, but the Cougar coaching staff was almost as excited with the signing of local defensive end Brian Soi.

"To me, Brian is a young guy who has a chance to play early" Crowton said. "He's a local kid who has the chance to make a quick impact for the team, defensively."

Soi lives near BYU and played at Timpview High in Provo. The ability to play for a big-time program close to home made BYU an attractive location for the 6'4", 295-pound end.

Soi will be joined on the line by another name familiar to BYU fans. Cougar fans can expect to see the defensive line buoyed up by members of the Denney family for the foreseeable future.

"There's a strong tradition of BYU football players in the family," recruit Brett Denney said. "I play the same position as my brothers. They've had so much success at BYU that I just told myself, 'Why I can't I do the same thing?' I always think I can do what they've done and better."

Brett plans on redshirting this fall before leaving on an LDS mission next winter, following advice given to him by his older brothers. "I could leave in the fall," Brett said, "but I saw how much better it was for my brother to leave in the winter. Coming back in the winter and having the off-season to prepare is a lot better training-wise."

No, Niu isn't a name that fans should remember from the past, but Niu does have a tie to a famous BYU football player. He's the first cousin to former Cougar and NFL star, Vai Sikahema. Niu has already completed a church mission and actually planned on heading back to Colorado State, but a spot opened up.

Though he won't be playing in LaVell Edwards Stadium on game day, Brett is looking forward to working out with older brother John.

"I'm sure he's going to push me pretty hard," Brett said. "But it'll be weird to play with guys that are older. John's always been so much ahead of me. He had left for BYU-Idaho before I ever really even started playing football. Now we're going to be working out together."

Another family connection also might directly affect Brett. John Denney is the Cougar long

Terry Nashif

Position:
Point guard

Size:
5'10", 165 lbs.

Awards:
Honorable mention All-USA by USA Today as a senior at Evergreen High, Vancouver, WA, 2000

2002-2003 Stats
2.7 points/game
2.2 assists/game
44.4 three-point percentage
70.0 free throw percentage

STRENGTHS

The play of the whole team feeds off the point guard, and Nashif has proved to be a savvy, intelligent ball handler. He handles the ball skillfully and does a good job setting up the Cougar jump shooters.

BYU struggled to break the press in early games against Creighton and Oklahoma State, but Nashif uses his speed and quickness to get the ball up the court. He can also penetrate, getting into the lane to draw the defense.

WEAKNESSES

Nashif is listed at five feet, 10 inches which makes him a dwarf on the court. He does a lot of things very well, but his size might really hurt the Cougars when he gets posted up down low by big point guards. It also means that he has to be wide open to get his shots off.

The Cougars rely on Nashif to direct the team, but at times he's been confused by opposing defenses. That was evident in the Cougar's loss to Utah, when the offense seemed stagnant at times. He has the responsibility of making sure the team knows what to do to beat any look shown by an opponent.

His greatest asset to the team is the fact that he doesn't make mistakes. He only has 14 turnovers in 20 games, easily the fewest for anyone on the team who gets significant minutes. That's the stat that won Nashif the starting job.

STATS:

72 percent free throws (13-18)

STRENGTHS

After starting point Julie Sullivan went down with a torn ACL, Nelson stepped in and filled in with poise. She has handled all the pressure thrown at her.

Put in the pressure cooker situation of the point guard position, Nelson is a fundamentally sound ball-handler.

She opens up the offense, creating shots for her teammates on both the inside and outside.

WEAKNESSES

At times Nelson hesitates to shoot the ball. She's proved that she can make it, but she needs to have the confidence to take more shots.

She doesn't have experience as a starting point guard hitting 42 percent of her shots from the three-point line. In a win against Wyoming on Jan. 18, she drained four out of five from beyond the arc.

Just as any good point guard should, she dishes out the ball as good as anybody. A point guard should be unselfish, and Nelson is willing to share.

Nelson needs to look to push the ball more. BYU isn't getting enough fast-break opportunities. She needs to drive the lane in order to open up the offense.

Nelson needs to find a way to get to the foul line. She's only ratio is almost 2 - to - 1. She has 44 assists compared to 26 times this season.

Game On

For years, BYU has been taking UVSC's best athletes. Now UVSC is going Division One. Do we hear rivalry?

By LEIGH DETTMAN

now that there are two Division I schools in the same town.

"Do I think UVSC going D-I is going to hurt us? No," Judkins said. "For several reasons, one is our university is more well known. Secondly, they can't go to the NCAA tournament for six years. The third reason is they're not in a conference, so there is no chance you can tell a kid, 'Hey you can have the chance to win a conference championship.'"

Fourth, we have better facilities than they have."

Nelson said UVSC's move won't affect BYU for a few years.

"I think they'll be a real good program, but they have to get established," Nelson said. "Will we be rivals? Oh yeah — why not?"

Travis Hansen is just one of the BYU athletes that made the move from Wolverine to Cougar.

But Nelson believes UVSC will be able to recruit quality players, even though BYU is only a few miles away.

"There are a lot more LDS players that can't go to BYU," Nixon said. "I still think with Ricks not having athletics anywhere, that there is still a niche for Utah Valley. BYU only needs so many players each year and they only need so many positions each year."

Judkins isn't worried about recruiting

Twice a year, BYU students go crazy over one of the most storied rivalries in the country. The University of Utah/ BYU match up is one of the toughest in the nation.

Now UVSC wants in on the action.

Soon, BYU could have another rival.

In March 2002, UVSC announced that its athletic program will make the jump from junior college ball to full-blown, NCAA Division I status next season.

"Going from junior college to Division I, from what I understand, has never been done before," said UVSC women's basketball coach and former BYU All-American Cathy Nixon. "It is a huge step."

The rivalry will have to wait a few years. UVSC basketball isn't even in a conference yet. The basketball teams will play a provisional schedule next season, and can't go to the NCAA tournament for six years.

BYU women's basketball coach Jeff Judkins said he can't wait to play the Wolverines.

"Ask them why they won't play us," Judkins said. "They're not real crazy about playing us. If they schedule a game, we'll play them."

UVSC sophomore forward Katie Wilson tells a different story.

"I've heard they won't add us to their schedule," Wilson said. "I think it would be fun to play them, but whatever."

Nixon said she wants to build a rivalry with cross-town BYU.

"BYU is at a level that we only dream about being some day," Nixon said. "We're going to try to follow in their footsteps and hopefully it will develop into a healthy rivalry."

In the past, UVSC and BYU had a close relationship, helping each other out in the recruiting process. BYU sends players to UVSC to gain experience, and the Wolverines send their star players to BYU.

BYU men's basketball star, Travis Hansen played one year at UVSC before transferring. In the BYU softball team's first year of existence, about half of the team transferred from UVSC, said former Wolverine softball coach Todd Fairbourne.

Two players from the Cougar women's for the regular student, try throwing passion for the mountain into the mix.

Because the people who really love the sport aren't just going up on occasion.

"I'm going skiing at least three times a week now," said junior Bryson Richards, 23.

And even when there wasn't a lot of snow to ski or ride just a few weeks ago, Richards was on the mountain.

"I actually ruined a brand new pair of Rossi Bandits XX because it was so rocky," he said. "But when there's been no snow all winter, you make the best of it."

Other passionate skiers reaffirm Richards' attitude.

"I'm going to ski in the winter pretty much no matter what," said freshman Michael Roberge, 19. "But that one really good powder day we've had this season had made up for all the snow shortage."

Both Richards and Roberge are dedicated to the sport of skiing. So dedicated, in fact, Roberge refers to his hobby as an addiction.

"Oh, I'm definitely addicted to skiing. It's going to be a life long addiction for me," Roberge said.

And every addiction starts somewhere.

Most serious skiers can remember, with detail, the first time they went skiing. More importantly, they can recall when skiing moved beyond a pastime and became a passion.

Roberge started "seriously skiing" with his father at age 12. The Colorado native and his dad would go skiing weekly, and Roberge says that was when his addiction was formed.

Richards' hometown of Potomac, Md., doesn't offer a lot of skiing options, and probably never will, but he was raised to ski. He would make the drive to the resorts in Pennsylvania and his family made an annual trip to Utah to ski at Park City.

"The skiing out East is icy, horrible and very annoying," Richards said. "So BYU being in Utah has definitely been a bonus."

Even Roberge, who is just from the other side of the Rockies, is loyal to Utah snow. "There's a huge difference between Utah and Colorado snow, especially for skiers. Colorado snow is heavier and it doesn't get as much snow," Roberge says. "It's a sad fact, but true."

Skiers and snowboarders

Committee recognized it when they decided to have the 2002 Olympics in Salt Lake City. And Utah's resorts are consistently profiled as being some of the best in the world.

And it doesn't take much more than the snow to get people to the mountain.

"If there's 3 feet or more of new snow during the night, you drop everything. You go. Unless there's something extreme, like midterms, you definitely skip class and work. You only get really good snow three or four days a year, so you take advantage when they come," Roberge said.

Like Roberge said, when it's snowing, you go. And you go no matter the expense.

And the sports of snowboarding and skiing aren't free. Richards said he spends about $500 a year on skiing, including the cost of his season pass.

Roberge spends about a thousand dollars a year on skiing. "I have a season pass to Alta, but I take trips to go to other resorts with friends and that adds up quick," he said.

It's a Passion

BY COLBY O'VERY

There are several reasons that people love to live in Utah. BYU is only one of them.

There's also a past time and, to many people, a passion that is a driving force pulling a specific group of people to Utah.

These people can be found watching the weather channel's five-day forecast as if they were watching their favorite basketball team in the National Championship game.

Skiing and snowboarding is no longer just a hobby. It's a culture. It even has its own language, with words like sick and dumped.

Jared Burton is one of these people.

"I started snowboarding when I was six years old," said Burton, a 22-year old from Auburn, Calif., majoring in "snowboarding."

Burton works four days a week at the Canyons and spends another two per week just riding.

Burton's father was a major influence in his development as a snowboarder.

His father started building snowboards in 1981 and developed a line of snowboards known as Glacier, which he later sold and is now marketed in Sweden.

Growing up, Burton would usually hit the slopes with his father. "He still rides once or twice a week," Burton said about his dad.

Some people love the sport for the attention it brings them, others for the adrenaline rush.

"I've been around it for so long, learning new tricks and new moves gets me pumped to keep trying and progress," Burton said. "It's something you go out there to enjoy, not to impress anyone but just to have fun."

Progressing and learning to do jumps can be difficult at first, especially considering all the injuries that extreme skiers and snowboarders have experienced.

"I broke my femur skiing," said Steve McFarlane, a 25-year-old UVSC student from Spokane, Wash., majoring in business finance.

McFarlane spent four months in a hard cast recovering.

"You crash, you get up, you crash, you dislocate something and you try it again in a while," Burton said.
